Resumo (objetivos, atividades e resultados esperados) - em PT e/ou EN:	The DID. VALUE project seeks to define and implement a holistic model that facilitates, through disruptive methodology, innovative integration methods, learning mechanisms adapted to the needs of young people, among other aspects, the social and professional inclusion of young people with intellectual and developmental disabilities, with regard to their entry and contact with the labour market, specifically with paid traineeships and jobs. In addition, the project team argue's that the inclusion of this specific target group depends on their acquisition of digital literacy, communication and psychosocial skills and other job-specific competences. It also requires the engagement of different intervenient actors as family members, higher education institutions, potential employers, support agencies and regulatory institutions. It implies the need of a comprehensive and integrated model to understand the complexity of the IDD person employability issue and to create coordinated processes, methods, practices, resources and policy recommendations that can help to solve the problem in a systemic way.
